Presenter

Justine Kalas Reeves, D Psych, has had successes and failures of work with parents of child and adolescent patients. Since obtaining more experience of this type of work, she has used the ideas in the Novicks’ book 'Working with Parents Makes Therapy Work' and extended parent work to include the internal parents of adult patients.

Dr. Reeves trained in child and adult psychoanalysis at the Anna Freud Centre in London, qualifying in 2003. She worked in the Toddler Service at the Anna Freud Centre as well as at the Adolescent Unit of the Tavistock Clinic. In Washington, DC, she worked at the Jenny Waelder Hall Center for Children nursery school and the Lourie Center. Dr. Reeves has been in private practice in Woodley Park since 2004. She is a candidate in adult psychoanalysis at the Contemporary Freudian Society. She has a BA from University of Chicago; an MSW from Hunter College School of Social Work, and a Doctorate of Child and Adolescent Psychoanalytic Psychotherapy from University College London/Anna Freud Centre. Mark Solms and Mary Target supervised her doctoral research on children's dreams.

Presentation

Self-care -- how child and adult patients look after their bodies and psyches -- derives from how patients of all ages internalize parental care. Using clinical examples of work with child, adolescent and adult patients, analytic work with parents, internal or real, is described. While work with real parents presents crucial opportunities for improvements in the parent-child relationship, it is also extremely difficult work, particularly with parents of adolescents. Similarly, analyzing conflicts and roadblocks to bodily and psychical ownership and care in adult patients involves work with the internal parents.

Who should attend?

Psychiatrists, clinical social workers, psychologists, licensed professional counselors, pastoral counselors, clergy and persons with an interest in psychodynamic and psychoanalytic thinking and application.

Purposes of the APT program:

- To study the theory and practice of psychotherapy from a psychoanalytic perspective.
- To enhance the interest in advancements in modern clinical theory and technique.
- To better integrate clinical experience through dialogue with colleagues.
- To apply the insights of psychoanalytic thinking to the field of arts and humanities.
- To develop a clinical community.

Objectives – Participants will be able to:

- identify and explore similarities and differences of work with parents in child versus adult psychoanalysis, including boundary issues in work with actual parents.
- appraise and increase one’s ability to identify and explore one’s own countertransference and resistances to work with parents (the real parents in child/adolescent work and the internal parents of all patients and therapists/analysts).
• discuss conditions in child/adolescent work when it is clinically contraindicated for the same worker who sees the child/adolescent to work with the parents.
• explore how patients of all ages take in the parenting functions of self-care, be it of the body, psyche, or the care/valuation they give to their analytic treatment.

Format of the APT program:
• A prepared psychotherapeutic or psychoanalytic case will be presented and discussed.
• A prepared paper exploring psychoanalytic ideas represented in arts and culture will be presented.
• A discussion will follow the presentation.
• Occasionally presenters suggest appropriate readings prior to the program. Courses of two or three sessions generally require prior readings. APT will mail requisite material.

Registration
• There is no program charge for APT members.
• Non-members’ program fee is $25; Students’ program fee is $10.
• Advanced registration is required for courses.
• All APT programs are open to mental health professionals; the public is invited to attend programs exploring artistic subjects.
